

Reprinted from

A PENTON PUBLICATION

November 2002

MHMM

Material Handling Management

Connecting at Supply Chain & Logistics Expo

At this year's Supply Chain and Logistics Expo, held in Atlanta, logistics professionals and technology vendors traded ideas with attendees. Discussions focused on exchanging information across supply chains to better manage resources. Here's a sampling of wisdom exchanged during and between conference sessions.

Integrated process flow

"You may have one of every application but still not have a unifying process. You might have real money tied up in inventory somewhere on the network, but can't see it in motion. You may barely see it at rest. An integrated process flow to address that deals with global logistics, inventory management and ERP systems. You may have processes that involve manufacturing decisions, converting a product from one state to another state. There are pure inventory visibility applications, but I can't do anything with visibility unless

I bring it back into a process model and prompt people to engage that visibility so they can do something with it. This is a network business process. It's not my version of the process talking to your version; we're working together in a common process on a network that we participate in together."

Paul Strzelec, vice president, marketing, NewView Technologies Inc.

Newview

www.newview.com
1.877.447.8335
212.527.9997